WASHINGTON — The U.S. energy secretary, Donald P. Hodel, has been chosen to succeed William P. Clark as secretary of the interior. and President Ronald Reagan has decided to try to merge the Interior and Energy departments, administration sources said Wednesday.

On Tuesday night, Mr. Hodel branded as "speculation" reports of his selection to succeed Mr. Clark. "As far as I know, President Reagan has made no decision." he said. The White House personnel director, John S. Herrington, is "the only name on the list" to succeed Mr. Hodel at the Energy Department at this point, one source said, but the president has not

Some White House officials contend that the changes will give a drifting administration a badly needed "shot in the arm." Aides to Mr. Shultz said that concessions on procedures had been made by both sides. The Russians consented to return to the talks on nuclear arms and the Unit-ed States agreed to talks about all the space programs, including the planned programs involving space defensive research.

Mr. Shultz's aides said that at one point Tuesday it had seemed as if the Soviet Union might end the discussions without agreement on resuming arms-control talks if the United States did not renounce its space research program, which is called the Strategic Defense Initiative by the administration.

Under the terms of the accord for the talks, the Soviet Union and the United States will send one "umbrella" delegation that will encompass three subgroups. These groups will deal with space weapons and with the now-suspended negotiations on medium-range missiles and strategic weapons.

The date and place for the negotiations will be agreed upon in the next month through diplomatic channels, the statement said. The goal of the two days of talks had only been to establish the framework for future talks on nuclear and space issues, not to negotiate details of such an accord. Mr. Shultz said on his return

Wednesday to Washington that

At the same time, Soviet and

Officials on both sides Tuesday

Signed by General Charles A. Gabriel, air force chief of staff, the new manual incorporates an earlier air force text on space warfare that General Gabriel signed in 1982. That document, "Military Space Doctrine," spells out what the air force sees as the need to develop space-based weapons and train space forces

Two separate but related U.S. military space programs have drawn criticism from some members of Congress and sharp attacks from Soviet officials.

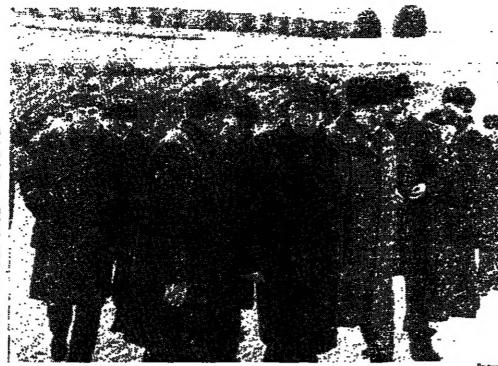

The air force is developing a sat-ellite-killing rocket that has been tested twice. In addition, the Pentagon launched its Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known the "star wars" program, in response to a call from President Ronald Reagan to develop weapons that could shoot down nuclear missiles. The Reagan administration has argued that space has been "militarized" for years, with surveillance satellites, intercontinental ballistic missiles that fly through space and, in the Soviet Union, an existing anti-satellite weapon.

However, the U.S. Air Force manual makes clear that the military is prepared to move well beyond satellites and ballistic mis-

"Space-based weapon systems could contribute to deterrence in eacetime and to more rapid conflict termination or increased survivability in war," it says.

The 15-page manual cautions that U.S. activities in space are restricted by international law, which prohibits testing nuclear weapons in space or stationing any weapons of mass destruction there. In one paragraph, it deals with arms limitations, saying that the air force will continue to study arms con-

Russian leaders know their economy is in trouble but refuse to make the necessary decisions to decen-tralize political control. Thus, the theory runs, they are looking for external help, much as they did in the early 1970s, in the form of trade, credits and Western technol-

Seeking external help is easier than making internal reforms. And so, many experts say, Moscow wants to clear the way for more economic intercourse with the West, and to do that means resuming the arms talks that Soviet leaders broke off more than a year ago when NATO started deploying new medium-range missiles in Eu-

For the Reagan administration's part, many officials came to believe that a bad relationship with Mos-cow was bad politics at home and meant had relations with allies. As more and more officials in the administration came to say, they had to show they were able to manage Soviet-American relations or else forfeit support from allies and the American public.

American officials are determined to demand larger concessions from Moscow than they are prepared to give. Moscow continues to maintain that there is a balance of forces and that concessions must be

Thus, as administration officials explained, their position here was to continue to demand that the first priority was for Moscow to reduce its arsenal of large and powerful land-based missiles.

To make the equation even more complicated, President Ronald Reagan aunounced a year ago that he would give new emphasis to developing space-based defenses to protect people against missile at-tacks. And he argued that the whole basis of nuclear deterrence had to be reconsidered. Instead of relying on the power to destroy, he maintained, the emphasis should be on defense.

This idea, it seemed, both fright-ened the Russians and impelled them to return to the bargaining table. Soviet leaders demanded agreement to avoid the militarization of outer space.

The result was Geneva, not so much because officials on either side believed there was much hope for arms control but because of the realization that overall relations could not otherwise be improved.

For these conservatives consider Mr. Regan more of a convert to their philosophy that economic growth is the best medicine for federal deficits than is a major ally of Mr. Baker, David A. Stockman.

With Mr. Regan in command at the White House, many officials expect Mr. Stockman to leave his office next summer after a budget is passed, though his office said there would be "no change" now.
Ideological conservatives both uside and outside the administration were glad to see the end of the domination of the White House by Mr. Baker and Mr. Deaver, who are known as pragmatists and who have often blocked them on both personnel and policy. Some suggested the change was important to combat what they described as morale problems, policy inlighting and disarray among the Reagan

China has opened up 19 areas to foreign investment so far. It established four special economic zones in the southeast, near Hong Kong, in 1980, opened up Hainan Island in the far south in April 1983 and then opened 14 coastal cities in April.

Filipino Minister Admits Rebel Gains

MANILA (NYT) - Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile warned Wednesday that the Communist insurgency in the Philippines was becoming increasingly bold and effective, noting that a "serious upsurge" in rebel activities resulted in the deaths of 2,000 civilians and military personnel last year Mr. Enrile described the insurgents' operations as "the most formida-ble threat to our national security today," adding that during the past year the rebels had increased the size, scope and sophistication of their nilitary operations.

His remarks, made in a luncheon address, were the most detailed appraisal to date from a high-ranking government official of the insurgency's recent gains. Mr. Enrile termed the situation a "crisis," adding that the insurgents aimed to gain sufficient popular support to threaten the current government. "The grand design is to forge not only a military stalemate." he said, "but a so-called strategic stalemate with the government in all its political, economic, social and psychological dimensions."

Time Jury to Get Secret Israeli Data

NEW YORK (AP) — A U.S. district judge ruled Wednesday that the jury in Ariel Sharon's $50-million libel suit against Time magazine will be allowed to hear evidence from secret Israeli documents and also will be told of Time's reservations about the information.

The Israeli government released on Monday the answers to three written questions submitted by Judge Abraham D. Sofaer about the secret documents that Israel had previously refused to provide for security reasons. On Wednesday, Judge Sofaer ruled that the complete Israeli reply to his questions was admissible as evidence, as well as a complaint by Time's Israeli lawyer, Chaim Zadok, that he was not allowed to see all the secret documents that the magazine deemed "crucial" to its defense. Time asserted in its Feb. 21, 1983, issue that General Sharon, then Israel's defense minister, had "discussed" with Lebanese Christian Phalangists the need for revenge for the assassination of President-elect Bashir Gemayal the day before the Phalangists killed hundreds of Palestinians in Beirut in 1982. The magazine has contended that the information to back up its article was contained in the secret documents, which were part of an Israeli commission's investigation of the massacre.

By Peter T. Kilborn New York Times Service WASHINGTON - Donald T. Regan, the loyal Treasury secretary whom President Ronald Reagan made his chief of staff Tuesday, has been an enigma through the first four years of the administration. It has never been clear, as his views on issues have shifted and changed over that period, where he really

The simple answer is that Mr. Regan shifts where the president shifts and leans where the president leans. Rarely, since he was first appointed to the Treasury, has Mr. Regan stood apart from the president on the nation's major economic questions - the budget deficit, growth, taxes, budget cuts - that often produced open splits within the administration and sometimes even within the White House staff.

A supremely confident, self-assured executive, Mr. Regan said that it would be premature to dis-cuss changes he would make in the White House. Mr. Baker's departure from the White House, expected in the spring, raises a variety of questions, principally whether his successor, Donald T. Regan, will be able to quickly build a staff of strategists and executives as effective as Mr.

Following the success of our 1982 conference, we are pleased to announce a one day briefing session focusing on "Modernization: Priority for the French Economy".

With the cooperation of the French Government, we have gathered together the key ministers most directly involved with policies affecting business activities in France. The program will include presentations by:

Pierre Bérégavoy. Minister of Economy, Finance and Budget. Edith Cresson, Minister of Industrial Redeployment and Foreign Trade. Hubert Curien, Minister of Research and Technology. Michel Delebarre, Minister of Labour, Employment and Vocational Trading. Roland Dumas* Minister of External Relations.

Additional insights will be provided by a panel of international businessmen and bankers.

Each presentation will be followed by a question-and-answer period, and simultaneous French-English translation will be provided at all times.

An important aspect of the conference will be the extensive opportunities to engage in informal discussion with the current policy makers and with other business executives actively doing business with France. To register for this exceptional international conference, please complete and return the registration form below without delay.

In May 1985, the IHT will publish an in-depth Special Report on the latest economic developments and

They said they were told that they would have to wait until the FBI and the Justice Department complete an inquiry into alleged improprieties by agency officials pertaining to the Donovan case.

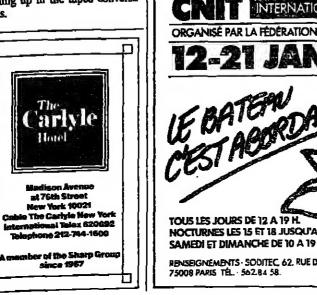

The inquiry concerns allegations that a federal judge was misled in 1979 when government attorneys sought to justify the FBI's continued electronic surveillance of one of Mr. Donovan's co-defendants, William P. Masselli, a reputed Mafia member.

Blacks Play More Powerful Roles in U.S. House

By Milton Coleman Washington Post Service

Overail, 20 House members are black - one of every 22 House members, but one of every four of its committee chairmen.

Caucus members and others say this signals a "coming of age" of the black lawmakers, the advent of more sophisticated politicking and a long-sought focus for the caucus.

It also offers the black legislators the opportunity to have a stronger imprint on House legislation and a chance - collectively and individually - to play more powerful roles in Capitol Hill politics.

However, some wonder about the effect of the new strains on the black representatives to resolve their sometimes conflicting roles as spokesmen for their racially and economically integrated districts, for the poor, for black Americans in general and

"My guess is that in the Black Caucus in the next two to four years, as they move into positions of leadership and prominence, there's going to be a sort of iden-tity crisis," said Norman J. Orn-stein, a political scientist at the American Enterprise Institute.

"All of a sudden you can't as comfortably play the role of pur-ist or conscience." Mr. Ornstein said. "You can't ignore the needs of people who don't agree with you as chairman, or you won't be chairman very long."

Representative Mickey Leland. Democrat of Texas, the chairman of the Black Caucus, said the new reality is likely to be an important element in the success or failure of Mr. Gray as Budget Committee chairman. In most recent years the caucus has focused much of its dissent on the budget and presented alterna-

Black Caucus members invoke the names of Mr. Dawson, the late Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Democrat of New York, who was chairman of the Education and Labor Committee from 1961 to 1967, and former Representative Charles C. Diggs Jr., Democrat of Michigan, chairman of the District Committee from 1973 to 1979, in their support for the seniority system.

Without that system, they contend, the three might not have ascended to their posts. And lacking an ironclad seniority system now, blacks are less likely to become chairmen of additional committees.

'We don't really think that racism in this country has so dimin-ished," Mr. Rangel said, "that given the opportunity to vote on individuals based on their experience and ability that we could overcome that without the assistance of the seniority system."

Observers say it is ironic that Mr. Gray, in only his fourth term, has become virtually the most powerful black in the House. But they also note that he won the chairmanship of the Budget Committee by exhibiting mastery of the political process in the

North Korea Delays Talks in South

The Associated Press

The rebels said Tuesday in a TOKYO - North Korea postponed on Wednesday talks on hu-manitarian issues with South Korea and threatened to put off economic discussions for the duration of a scheduled three-month military exercise involving U.S. and South Korean troops.

The humanitarian talks, which were scheduled to take place Jan. 23 in Seoul, are being postponed because they are "incompatible" with the "war rehearsal" maneuvers, according to a report by North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency. LONDON (AP) - Researchers at London's Hammersmith Hospital have announced the successful development of what they say is a revolutionary new surgical technique that can make the scalpel redundant in many instances.

Professor David Allison, director of diagnostic radiology at the hospital's medical school, said the technique involves ultra-fine tubes "armed" with a variety of tiny implements and guided along veins and arteries to the kidneys, liver, brain and other parts of the body.

He said the tubes can be used to seal arteries after stabbings, road accidents or in the treatment of ulcers. Kidney stones and gallstones can also be removed using the new technique, and blocked arteries in the limbs, kidneys and even the heart can be cleared, Dr. Allison said.

Kare Whooping Cranes Branch Out

LARAMIE, Wyoming (NYT) - Wildlife researchers have found that some of the 160 endangered whooping cranes in the United States, which now inhabit summer and winter sites in four different areas, may soon make a fifth area — Wyoming —their permanent summer home.

If a new whooping crane colony is established in Wyoming it will give the rare birds an additional area for propagation, thus enhancing the chances of increasing their population. In 1937 there were only 29 whooping cranes in the United States.

The whoopers, as they are called, have been wintering in New Mexico and Texas and summering in Idaho and Canada. Researchers say a group of about nine now has taken up summer quarters in the upper Green River Basin section of Wyoming.

Mastodon Bones Unearthed in Texas

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - A downtown construction site has yielded mastodon bones, teeth and tusks, and experts said this week the pit may rank as North America's second-largest repository of bones from the prehistoric elephant-like beasts after a similar site in Missouri.

The bones, lying in what may have been a watering hole more than 10,000 years ago, were discovered 17 feet below street level by a backhoe operator who noticed a flash of ivory in a mound of gray clay.

Scientists used hand shovels Tuesday to sift through the damp soil where the first bone was found Dec. 30, while buildozers scooped up dirt from other parts of the excavation for a 22-story office tower. Mastodons died out more than 10,000 years ago, but at least one of the tusks discovered was well-preserved by the clay, Ludelius said.

Too Much Water Endangers Infants

WILMINGTON, Delaware (NYT) - Infants suffering from a wide variety of ailments, from simple restlessness to convulsions, may in fact be "drunk" on water.

If, for example, they are fed with excessive amounts of very diluted formula, they may develop an extremely rare but potentially fatal condition called water intoxication, according to Robert E. O'Connor of the Wilmington Medical Center in Wilmington, Delaware.

Body cells swell and cellular metabolism is disturbed. Symptoms are restlessness, nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, weakness and convulsions. However, Dr. O'Connor warned that giving infants too little water when they

Conditioned Reflexes Show Brain Controls Immune Defenses

By Harold M. Schmeck Jr. New York Times Service

N the classic experiments of the Russian physiologist Ivan Pav-lov, dogs salivated when a bell rang because they had been trained so that their brains associated the sound with the presence of food. Now, American scientists have evoked a similar conditioned reflex to show that the brain can exercise direct control over cells of the immune defense system, the body's main bulwark against disease.

Other recent experiments in the United States and abroad have shown that the two hemispheres of the brain influence the immune defenses in different ways and that some brain chemicals have specific effects on immune cells.

It has long been known that the body's two most important windows on the outside world are the brain and immune defense system. Everything we hear, feel, see or imagine comes through the brain. And almost every virus, microbe or other foreign particle that invades the body triggers some kind of im-mune response. But the specific effects these two master systems exert on each other have been relatively little explored, partly because the interactions are so com-

Some ingeniously designed research is now beginning to reveal details of the brain's effects on the immune defenses. The findings have raised hopes that eventually the research may lead to better treatments for disorders in which the immunological defense system is deficient or active in some abnorma way.

One series of experiments has shown that the activity of certain nmune defense cells called natural killer cells can be greatly enhanced by the brain's trained response to a totally extraneous stimulus from the outside world — a strong odor. The killer cells are part of the body's surveillance system that protects against invasion and probably against cancer.

I HE research was designed by Novera Herbert Spector of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, a unit of the National Insti-tutes of Health. The experiments were done mainly at the University of Alabama medical school in Birmingham by Brent Solvason. Vithal Ghanta and Raymond Hiranatural killer cell activity.

LHE effect, Spector said, was comparable to that of Pavlov's experiments in which animals could ringing of a bell. In the new case, the animals' brains evidently activated the immune defense without waiting for the poly 1:C, just as the dogs had begun to salivate in the Paylovian experiments without waiting for the food to appear.

In the new experiments, several different control groups of mice were given treatments that were similar but not identical to the injections and exposure to odor that were the crux of the research. This was done to make sure that the effect was really what it seemed to be and was not a result of some unforeseen aspect of the experiments. For example, some animals were exposed to the odor of camphor and given the injections in each of nine sessions. Then, in the 10th session, they were not exposed to the odor at all, but were given injections of harmless salt water.

When the two groups were compared, the scienusts found that the animals in the experimental group - those given only the exposure to odor of camphor in the 10th session — had natural killer cell activity three times as great as the animals in the "control" group that lacked the exposure to the odor in the final

This threefold difference was strongly significant, Spector said. Furthermore, the animals that had been "conditioned" to the odor had 39 times as much activity of natural killer cells as another control group that was exposed to the odor of camphor and given injections of salt solution in each of 10 sessions. 'Nuclear Winter' Could Be Less Severe Than Predicted

By Lee Siegel

The Associated Press LOS ANGELES — Long periods of sub-freezing weather are unlikely in a "nuclear winter," but smoke from a nuclear war still could block enough sunlight to drop summer temperatures to near freezing and destroy crops, re-

"The intensity of the cooling is not as great as originally pro-posed," said Alan Hecht of the National Oceanographic and Atmo-Administration, cas. spheric Administration, summarizing the findings by re-searchers at California's Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory and Colorado's National Center for Atmospheric Research.

The new studies were based on some of the most sophisticated computer simulations yet develoned to estimate what might happen if a nuclear war set cities, industrial centers and forests aftre, blocking sunlight and plunging Earth into a dark, cold "nuclear winter" for survivors.

The original nuclear winter theory was proposed about two years ago by atmospheric physicist Richard Turco, astronomer Carl Sagan average, annual Northern Hemi- MacCracken said.

subfreezing weather, but simply show a range of possibilities. That range extends from a prolonged deep freeze over much of the Northern Hemisphere to shorter periods of near-freezing temperatures over much smaller arsibility of an extended period of

The researchers found that a nuclear war during summer could reduce temperatures from the 70-to-90-degree range down to near freezing in the central portions of continents for shorter periods of time than envisioned in earlier studies, said atmospheric physicist Michael MacCracken. They also found temperatures probably would not change much in coastal

But he said even brief periods of near-freezing temperatures would destroy many food crops.

Lawrence Livermore researchers found that smoke from burning cities in the Northern Hemisphere would spread to the Southern and their colleagues. It predicted Hemisphere far more rapidly than that smoke and dust could reduce had been believed previously, Dr.

Plants have fed the world and cured its ills since life began. Now we're destroying their principal habitat at the rate of 50 acres every minute.

We live on this planet by courtesy of the earth's green cover. Plants protect fragile soils from erosion, regulate the atmosphere, maintain water supplies for agriculture and prevent formation of deserts. Without plants man could not survive.

Yet, knowing this, we are destroying our own life-support system at such an alarming rate that it has already become a crisis - a crisis for ourselves and an even bigger one for our children.

The figures alone should tell the story - we destroy a tropical rain forest three times the size of Switzerland every year; within 25 years only fragments of the vast Malaysian and Indonesian forests will remain.

What we are destroying Much of the food, medicines and materials we use every day of our lives is derived from the wild species which grow in the tropics. Yet only a tiny fraction of the world's flowering plants have been studied for possible use. Horrifyingly, some 25,000 of all flowering species are on the verge of extinction.

There is no villain - except ignorance and short-sightedness. The desperately poor people who live in the forests have to clear areas for crops and fuel, but they are doing this in such a way that they are destroying their very livelihood.

Arms Talks Are On Again

Secretary of State George Shultz went to Geneva to reopen arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union. Late Tuesday he fairly claimed "success." After 14 hours of talks with the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei Gromyko, the two announced that their countries would soon start talking about space and nuclear arms (strategic and intermediate-range) with the ambitious aim of limiting and reducing their arsenals and eventually of eliminating them. So after a frosty 13-month interlude brought on by Moscow's boycott of the START and INF talks, the United States and the Soviet Union will be back at a table.

Each side, it appears, is giving up something to get there, Moscow dropped its rigid and noisy insistence — the Gorbachov line — that the "star wars" program be terminated as the first order of arms control business. The Reagan administration seems to have backed off its earlier position, asserted strongly in the days preceding the Geneva meeting, that it would not even consider submitting "star wars" to discussion with Moscow.

The upshot is that space arms will for the first time be included in a negotiation. The discussion of America's Strategic Defense Initiative, of special concern to Moscow, will allow the United States to press its concerns about what Mr. Shultz called "the erosion of the ABM treaty" - an evident reference to indications of Soviet cheating on that earlier accord. Along with space arms, there will also be talks on strategic and intermediate-range missiles, the familiar categories on which stalemate had already been achieved. This "complex of questions," in the Geneva communique's phrase, will be taken up by Soviet and U.S. delegations divided into three groups.

There has been no movement in East-West arms control since the Soviets' invasion of Afghanistan in 1979. The labs and the production lines, however, have not been similarly inactive. Is there a place now for cautious hope that things are a bit different? Mr. Reagan is resuming negotiations not just because of peace" pressures, some perhaps self-generated, but because he feels his rearmament program has evened up the bargaining odds. The Soviets appear to have deep anxieties about America's tremendous technological thrust and thus a further incentive to deal.

A formidable backlog of disagreements and difficulties lies in the way of substantive progress. Only the "objectives," not the all-impor-tant details of Mr. Reagan's and the Kremlin's negotiating strategies, were pursued at Geneva. Still, it is good to have the two countries engaging again in what Secretary Shultz called "the necessary give and take," and agreeing finally to address the serious issues.

Baker to the Fire Station

The Treasury Department can only be strengthened by the switch of jobs between it and the White House. In James A. Baker 3d it staffed in recent years. The erosion in the gets an extremely able administrator canable of imposing a consistency and purpose that Treasury policy has not often shown in the past four years. But Mr. Baker will be working in an administration that regards the matter of whether it really wants an economic policy, or needs one, as an open question.

Meanwhile, the imbalances in the American economy continue to grow. The most obvious of them is the federal budget delicit, but the more immediately dangerous is the deficit in international payments. That one leaves the United States vulnerable to sudden changes of mind on the part of foreign investors who do not necessarily have much concern for stability in America. Working at the Treasury in the months ahead is going to be like doing duty in a firehouse. As long as inflation stays relatively low and business keeps expanding, there will not be much to do beyond the usual routine polishing the fire engines' brass, in effect because the president does not see the need to do much. But if inflation starts to rise or the economy to slide, the bells will ring at the Treasury and the secretary will have to move very fast in highly technical operations that to Mr. Baker, are not familiar. He will need, first of all, to recruit a stronger structure of senior civil servants had been going on for some years before this administration came to office. In the past four years there have been visible gaps at the political level as well, particularly in the crucial areas of monetary affairs and international finance. If the dollar's very high exchange rate should suddenly drop, the strength of the performance in those offices would make a great difference to the administration and the record that it will leave in American politics.

Beyond the ability to respond with technical skill to an emergency, the next secretary of the Treasury will need to think carefully about the administration's machinery for making economic decisions. That machinery is not in good working order now. One of the principal jobs, the chairmanship of the economic advisers, is vacant. The Office of Management and Budget has only a limited role. Above all, there is the growing atmosphere of indifference to all the money troubles. The view at the White House is that those carping economists, with their dire predictions, are wrong once again and that things are going along very nicely. So they are, for the moment. But if that should change, it might change very quickly.

Other Opinion

A 'Happy Ending' in Geneva

When diplomats get together to talk about talks, their objective is to establish a framework for substantive negotiations. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko achieved that precise, limited and highly important objective during their two days of discussions in Geneva. We welcome the Geneva accord as the "important beginning" described by Mr. Shultz. The American and Soviet governments, despite their ideological differences, have no higher obligation to themselves or the world than to bring their nuclear rivalry under control.

- The Baltimore Sun

The Geneva conference undeniably had a happy ending. It should not be forgotten that Mr. Shultz came to Geneva without expecting much to result. But the political will to reach an agreement was there. The Soviets have softened their position a great deal in the last few weeks, without obtaining the same degree of concessions from Washington.

- La Libre Belgique (Brussels).

The public, awash in television hype, must desperately need a primer to the almost hyster-ical focus on the Shultz-Gromyko encounter. Before the Reagan era, such a meeting in Geneva would have been routine unto boredom. Today it has the air of a Second Coming.

Wars, even cold wars fought by proxy with big defense budgets, are essentially political struggles; and to win them you must gain and hold the political high ground. Here the Reagan administration has seriously defaulted. The sterility of the administration's record in Soberly viewed, the Shultz-Gromyko talks may be merely the latest in nuclear-age bread and circuses, bringing arms control no nearer. Yet if they convincingly satisfy the craving on both Atlantic shores for reassurance, they may do more to strengthen the hand of the West than a dozen MXs or B-1s.

New Accountability in Nigeria

This was the first Christmas in Nigeria's history, wrote a Lagos columnist, "when so many representatives of an entire generation of powerful and influential men will be singing their carols in jail." The Era of Armaments Has Ended ...

W ASHINGTON — One day in March 1945, Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan sat down beside the desk of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in the Oval Office and noticed on FDR's desk a copy of a speech with a heavy line under these words: "If World War III unhappily arrives, it will open new laboratories of death too horrible to contemplate."

Within a month, FDR was dead, and in another four months the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima. Ever since, Americans of conscience have wrestled with the problems it posed.

Early on, the issue became bipolar, as the Soviet Union joined the nuclear club. By now the weaponry has so increased in force, numbers and accuracy that human life in the Northern Hemisphere, if not on the entire globe, could be destroyed in a nuclear exchange.

Having stood in the rubble of Hiroshima and Nagasaki three months after their destruction and having written about this subject for more than 30 years, I believe some points merit emphasis today as America and the Soviet Union again discuss what to do about nuclear weapons.

The United States and the U.S.S.R. are like

"two scorpions in a bottle, each capable of killing the other, but only at the risk of his own life," as J. Robert Oppenheimer once put it.

To get out of that bottle. President Kennedy said, "we must re-examine our own attitude as individuals and as a nation,"

He meant that the problem was political: that the scientific arrangements in any agreement to curb nuclear weapoury must rest on a political base acceptable to both superpowers. All these decades, the scientists have raced ahead of the political leaders and their diplomatic emissaries.

We all know that American and Russian attitudes toward each other have been permeated with fear and haured. Perhaps most Americans agree with President Reagan's characterization of the Soviet Union as "the focus of evil in the modern world," a country whose leaders "reserve unto themselves the right to commit any crime, to lie, to cheat." The spew of fear and hatred the other way round, based on Marxist-Leninist dogma, has been no less intense.

At times, as in the numerous crises over Berlin and the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, the superpowers have seemed to be moving inexorably to the brink. It was Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev By Chalmers M. Roberts who remarked, after Cuba, that "there was a

Mr. Khrushchev drew an important lesson from Cuba. In the following year the Societ Communist Party adopted his new formulation that "the atomic bomb does not adhere to the class principle" (i.e., it will not destroy just the capitalists); "it destroys everybody within the range of its devastating force" (us Communists. too). Both sides now have long recognized that.

Andrei Gromyko, the veteran Soviet foreign minister who met Secretary of State George Shultz this week in Geneva, has noted: "The systems of the control and direction of arms are becoming increasingly autonomous ... from the people who create them ... The govern-ment[s] must do everything possible to be able to determine the development of events and not to find themselves in the role of captives of events." Despite all the distrust, then, there exists a rational basis — self-preservation — for the superpowers to negotiate ways of lessening the chances of nuclear war. Now, in Geneva, we have conducted a new exploratory round,

We have been there before, beginning in 1946, when Bernard Baruch introduced the American plan for an international atomic energy agency with the somber Biblical words, "We are come to make a choice between the quick and the dead."

That moment, however, was not "ripe," as the diplomats say. Nor has it been ripe on subsequent occasions when one side or the other felt it was being locked into a dangerous inferiority. The two strategic arms limitation agreements, SALT-1 and -2, came at moments when the superpowers felt they were at rough parity.

William C. Foster, a wise American arms control negotiator, described the circumstances necessary for success as that moment when "the technological stars and planets" are "in favorable conjunction, so to speak."

For three years President Reagan contended that America was in a state of inferiority, suffer-ing from a dangerous "window of vulnerability." The Shultz-Gromyko talks were possible only because Mr. Reagan in early 1984 began publich to accept the notion of rough parity, although it is apparent that there are administration footdraggers, notably in the Pentagon.

Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger showed that agreement (SALT-1) was possible at a time of rough parity even if there were bitter political differences. Today, despite strong differences over Poland, Afghanistan, Central America, hu-man rights and numerous other issues, nuclear parity has been evident enough to make the moment "ripe" for the Geneva meeting.

And "the technological stars and planets" are in conjunction: Mr. Reagan's "star wars" concept offers a bargaining chip, something to trade for a major lessening in the menace of the Kremlin's overwhelming number of land-based intercontinental nuclear missiles.

It is easy to be a pessimist, to feel that human history is so full of misperceptions and miscalculations that there is little reason to expect that Americans and Russians will not ultimately stumble into a holocaust.

Still, how can we do other than hope that, as President Eisenhower put it, the superpowers have "sense enough to meet at the conference table with the understanding that the era of armaments has ended and the human race must conform its actions to this truth or die?"

Middle East: Look for a Crossroads Not Far Ahead

P ARIS - The Middle East is ap-P proaching another crossroads. There have been many important changes in nearly two generations since the Jewish state was founded. But the timing never coincided in a way that could bring Israelis and Arabs closer to a settlement. Whenever one side neared a willingness to move, the other wasn't ready. Now a small chance for approaching comwhelming military power. One is to reverse the continued mon ground appears on the horizon.

Again, timing is everything. Egypt and Jordan are in a hurry. The Egyptian establishment, both supporters and critics of President Hosni Mubarak, is edgy. The surface is calm, but they note telltale signs of unrest in their country, which is normally placed but is capable of explosions. There is a sense of lack of direction.

of impatience seeking a new goal. They don't know what to do, and they look to Washington for inspiraaxiom that the United States cannot take any foreign policy initiative be-fore elections. So they figure that something must happen in 1985, or soon after, or they will be left to despair another four years. "Even a gimmick." one senior official pleaded, "but something soon, something to break the feeling that the peace process is stagnant."

Jordan's King Hussein is pressing because he realizes better than most that Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza are not frozen in time.

He fears that Israeli settlement in the areas is becoming an irreversible step to annexation, which would confront both Israelis and Palestinians with new catastrophes. He has moved with unaccustomed audacity in restoring relations with Egypt and hosting the Palestine National Council, which aggravates tensions with Syria and costs him support from Saudi Arabia. He wants U.S. help to close Arab ranks behind him.

Israelis, with reason, have always worried about instability in Arab countries as a potential flaw in any covert for peace and Ezer Weizman's new cabinet role of seeking contacts worry that moderates may be swept out by the return of a rampaging Ariel Sharon at Israel's helm. So a favorable moment for the peace process may be coming, but it probably won't last long. It will be important for the United States to stretch the time available with delicate diplomacy, small steps of reas-surance for Israel and hope for Arabs. Then, when the time is ripe in a year or so, Washington should insist on negotiations. To make clear now that this is America's intention would help prevent another tragic slippage.

Middle East: Italians Busy Out in Front

ROME — For the first six months of 1985 Italy holds the presidency of the European Community's Council of Ministers. The Rome goverument seems determined to try to rally European support for an initiative in the Arab-Israeli conflict. Prime Minister Bettino Craxi has had a series of meetings with Arab leaders in the last two months. He has visited Riyadh, Cairo, Algiers and Tunis. Early last month be had a long meeting with Yasser Arafat at PLO beadquarters near Tunis. That visit was criticized by some members of the Italian coalition government and caused resentment in Israel,

Mr. Craxi was accompanied by Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti. The two men came home apparently convinced that Mr. Arafat had made a firm break with the more extremist members of his movement and might be ready to abandon armed struggle By Enrico Jacchia with the Israelis and agree to formal recognition of the state of Israel as a condition for the start of Israeli-Palestinian negotiations.

An Arab League meeting expected soon in Riyadh would be an occasion to count the Arab states that would back Mr. Arafat if he took the plunge. Mr. Craxi's entourage has insisted that this rare opportunity ought not to be wasted.

Mr. Craxi has had undisputed success in improving Italy's economic conditions and curbing the inflation rate. But he is aware of the limited political and diplomatic resources he commands in any foreign policy initiative — although he does have a long-established friendly relationship with Israel's Prime Minister Shimon Peres, a fellow social democrat. Italy's coalition government is split on the issue of Arab-Israeli negotiations. Most Christian Democrats and Socialists are believed to favor an Arafat-Hussein formula involving a Palestinian state on the West Bank, are typically friends and/or allies. federated with Jordan. Formal security guarantees would be offered to Israel. The Israelis have so far rejected any suggestion of an independent Palestinian entity on their border.

The other side has its champion in Giovanni Spadolini, who has just visited Israel. In his public remarks in Israel and at home, Mr. Spadolini acknowledges a need for Palestinian "autonomy," but he systematically avoids the term "Palestinian state," Compromise between these two approaches would appear difficult. Still an unexpected visit by Mr. Andreotti to King Hussein in Amman last weekend has indicated that supporters of the PLO-Jordan formula want to move quickly.

It is no secret that most West European governments are uncomfortable with the situation in the Middle East. But the first formal statement of EC policy on the Arab-Israeli conflict. the so-called declaration of Venice in 1980, was resented in Israel, which regarded it as pro-Arab. At the recent summit in Dublin, Italy's EC part-ners refused to give the Italians the mandate they sought for another Middle East initiative.

Mr. Craxi has gone ahead on his own, apparently believing that if Mr. Arafat can bring himself to make a concrete gesture toward Israel, several key West European governments would change their stance. The goal of an EC-supported initiative would be a confederation be-tween Jordan and a Palestinian state on the West Bank. If Mr. Craxi has his way, Washington could find itself with a difficult diplomatic choice to make in the Middle East.

The Press: Standards Too High?

By Philip Geyelin

PARIS — While the libel cases brought in New York by General William Westmoreland and Ariel Sharon are heavy with legal implica-tions, they are equally heavy in their potential effect on relations between the public, the press and the makers of American foreign policy.

Such is the contrariness of the conservatives, fallen-away Democrats and others of right-wing persuasion in Ronald Reagan's legions that no matter who wins — the generals, CBS or Time magazine in whichever case — the press will take a beating. Libel denied will be proof positive that the "media" are destructively all-power-ful. Libel damages awarded will only go to show that the news business is recklessly irresponsible in its reach for attention-getting sensations that enrich careers and bottom lines.

Public trust will be shaken once again. This will be largely the doing of ideologues in prominent places who would rather reinforce their misperceptions of how things work in the real world than get on with the busi-ness of making do with life that is unfair and with a world that is sometimes kindly and often cruel.

As documentary evidence, I offer an excerpt in a recent issue of Public Opinion magazine from a book to be published in the spring by Michael Ledeen, senior fellow at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies. The book's ti-tle, "Grave New World," is in time with Mr. Ledeen's views on public opinion, the press and foreign policy. He worked briefly at the State Department for Alexander Haig. His intellectual connections include Henry Kissinger and Jeane Kirkpatrick. His jaundiced view of a freewheeling press is widely shared.

He starts with the proposition that "most top officials" begin the mom-ing with compilations of press clip-pings; this conditions their day's work and has "more influence on politics than even the most secret intelligence." That is cause enough for anxiety, coming from a former insider. But you have to accept it if you are to entertain the rest of or official agreement. Arabs who take his reasons why the performance of some comfort from Mr. Peres's desire the press has a "devastating effect on our foreign policy."

This is so, the argument proceeds, because the press is afflicted by "ignorance of the world," "abstract moralism that permeates our popular culture" and, even worse, ambition. It directs its efforts at grabbing the attention of readers and viewers "not much interested in foreign news except as it affects them directly and dramatically." The result is a relentless search overseas for "an American angle," preferably scandalous. So far, this is an arguable theory. But when it is applied to coverage of foreign policy, the press becomes no better in Mr. Ledeen's eyes than the by Jeane Kirkpatrick: "They always plame America first."

Here is the heart of Mr. Ledeen's grievance and to the relevance of the libel suits. The press is "super critical of our leaders, while foreign countries, including our worst enemies, often get surprisingly gentle treat-ment," he laments. "On the rare occasion that investigative journalism turns on other countries, the targets

The stunning coincidence of these cases coming together in the same courthouse on Foley Square becomes powerful support for the argument that "the elite media have developed the leader of the Republican Party. a double standard for reporting the news," as Mr. Ledeen puts it. He acknowledges that there are "operational problems" for the American press in closed, totalitarian societies, but he does not allow these problems to get in the way of his conclusions: "The United States and its allies are held up against standards that are not applied to the Soviet Union and its satellites and proxies. Relatively minor human rights transgressions in friendly countries . . . are given far more at-tention and subjected to more intense criticism than are far graver examples of countries hostile to us." Strictly speaking, Mr. Ledeen is right. Underlying the legal question in the Westmoreland trial is the proposition that American leaders are and ought to be held to a stricter standard of truthfulness and responsiveness to the public than, say, Soviet leaders will be. Because Americans prize Israel's democracy and help defend it by furnishing Israel with arms and economic aid, should they not be entitled to hold Israel to a higher accountability for what it does with those arms than would be applied, say, to Syria or Lybia, with whom America has no such relationship? Holding self and allies to different, higher standards, in short, is part of what those libel suits, whatever their outcome, are all about. As a general principle, I don't understand what Mr. Ledeen thinks is wrong with that. Washington Post Writers Group.

Assassins. It is interesting to recall that the Assassins, whose name came from the Arabic for "hashish user," were fanatics who received, along with the promise of martyrdom, a supply of hashish before they attacked their victims. The erratic actions and the victims descriptions of the terrorists on the hijocked Kuwaitiairliner in Tehran last month suggest that the hijackers may have been high on hashish or some other drug.

Giving the Gold Away?

Regarding "Gold Upturn Not Fore-seen in Near Term" (Jan. 1):

What is the meaning of the state-ment that "the price of gold has dropped more than 150 percent in less than five years"? If it had dropped by 100 percent, it would in my reckoning have come down to zero. Are we then to understand that gold is now (etching a negative price?

There are precedents in the press for this imprecise and rather absurd formulation, e.g. "a devaluation of 400 percent." However, I have come to expect numeracy from the Inter-national Herald Tribune.

Musical Chairs: Who Plays the Tune?

WASHINGTON — The one thing you can be fairly sure of about these changes in the White House staff and the cabinet is that they were not planned by the president or approved by him until the day before they were announced. He does not like change, and why should he, having been re-elected by winning in 49 states with the old gang? The explanation is that they mposed their wishes and ambitions on him, and not vice versa. This is a lunny outfit. Everybody calls his own signals. Some, like Attorney General William French Smith, Judge William Clark and Mike Deaver, just take themselves out of the game. Others, like Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan, who should be fired, are allowed to stick around. Some, like the economic advisers, just drift away, and the president lets them go or stay with a wave and a smile.

There is a good argument for shaking up an administration after four years and switching officials from one job to another or letting them go when they are tired or hungry, but it is hard to figure the logic of the recent changes or de-cide who, if anybody, is in charge. Take the swap between Jim Baker as White House chief of staff and

Donald Regan as Treasury secre-tary. This is like telling the piano player or even the director of the orchestra to play the fiddle. Nobody around here really believes that President Reagan thought Secretary Regan would be a better White House chief of staff than Mr. Baker. Or that he thought Mr. Baker, at least for a while, probably be next to go, Mr. Shultz would be able to testify in Congress as effectively as Mr. Regan about the administration's mystifying policies on how to get rid of the alarming budget and trade deficits.

By James Reston

But Jim Baker — like Howard Baker of Tennessee, the former Republican leader of the Senate was borred with the endless task of pulling the president's chestnuts out of the fire, and wanted out. Mr. Reagan did not want them to go. He had to persuade them to stick, accommodate them or lose them. He did not persuade them.

What is particularly interesting is why James Baker insisted on leaving the White House - and he did insist, although he denies it — just when Edwin Meese, Judge Clark, Jeane Kirkpatrick and the other conservative supporters of the president were resigning and leaving the White House to the moderates like Vice President Bush, whose campaign against Mr. Reagan in 1980 was run by James Baker.

It clearly was not that the president wanted or niged Mr. Baker to leave. The guess here is that Mr. Baker was tired of the endless feuds between Secretary of State Shultz and Secretary of Defense Weinberger over foreign and defense policy. and the quarrels between conservatives and moderates in his own party over the budget deficit. Mr. Baker is not the first and will surely not be the last to opt out of this confusing policy tangle. Dave Stockman, the budget director, will se Helms was more important than their diplomatic responsibilities. Most important, the balance of power between the president and is trying to weed out those right-wing ambassadors who thought their public support of Senator Jes-

Congress is changing. It is not only that the Democrats retain a major-ity in the House, but that the Senate now in control of Republican leaders who question not only the president's domestic economic policies but also wonder about his defense and foreign policies.

The resignation of Mr. Reagan's closest friends and advisers in the White House and the cabinet have added to his problems. Even the Republican leaders in Congress are asking why so many are leaving him and why so many others who are staying insist on taking jobs he really does not want them to have. The more the members of the cabinet, the White House staff and gress look at recent presidents like Ronald Reagan or Jimmy Carter, the more they begin to think in the night that they could do the job themselves and maybe even better. The two Bakers are not immune to this dream. Howard of Tennes-see went back home to run for pres-ident in 1988. James, tired of the anonymity of the White House, will now be out front as secretary of the Treasury, testifying on the Hill and appearing on television. He will not have the power he had in the White House, but he will have the publicity. That, unfortunately, seems to be most important aspect of presidential politics these days.

WALL STREET WATCH

THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1985

An 'Ominous' Precedent For Reagan's New Term

By EDWARD ROHRBACH International Herald Tribune

ALVIN Coolidge was president and the "business of America was business" the last time share prices rose on Wall Street during the first year of a Republican's new presidential term. That was 60 years ago.

"It's ominous," said Robert H. Stovall, Dean Witter's director of portfolio strategy. "All Republican presidents since 1925 have presided over declining markets in the years of their inaugura-

While no one ever accused Ronald Reagan of being reticent, Wall Street seems to be detecting a growing resemblance between him and Coolidge, who was known as "Silent Cal." Ralph Bloch, technical analyst at Moseley Hallgarten, notes that the percent age of market advisory services that are bullish toward stocks is the highest since August 1978 — and is within shooting distance of the "October Massacre" of that year. "I am not suggesting another massacre," he said, "merely pointing out that history strongly suggests that it is very difficult to envision a major leg north with more than 60 percent of the advisers looking for it."

The talk is of a peak in March, then black holes and vicious cycles.

Amid the widespread optimism, it is not easy to find the bearish view. There is Richard J. Hoffman, who runs an investment firm in New Jersey. But even he sees stocks up sharply in the

"The bullish case is growing because value is there — but the real question is sustainability," he said.

Mr. Hoffman said there seemed to be a growing trend toward "a vision of trivana" amid "belief in continued low inflation and an extended business cycle." He added, however, that "in our analysis the extended cycle scenario will not come true. Instead, the economy will enter a recession in early 1986 following a vicious spiral of rising inflation, rising rates and a falling dollar. As a consequence, the euphoria will evaporate as rates begin to rise in the spring.

HE ride up, however, which Mr. Hoffman sees happening in spurts, will elevate the Dow average to new highs, peaking in March between 1,350 and 1,400.

He interprets as positive the news that Donald T. Regan and James A. Baker 3d will switch jobs at the Treasury Department and the White House. He said that Wall Street's "main hangup" this winter has been its doubts on whether U.S. government plans for dealing with the tax issue and the federal deficit were

The biggest current error in the conventional wisdom on the market, he said, is the assumption that not enough funds are available to fuel a significant advance. "But when the time comes for the market to go up, the cash will come from other sources,"

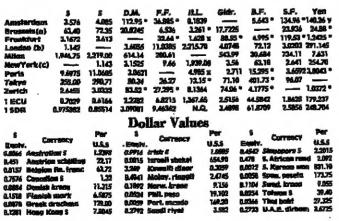

But Mr. Hoffman also warns that after peaking this spring, the stock market is likely to fall precipitously: "There is a serious risk of black holes of illiquidity forming during the rush for the exit." So his investment strategy is to avoid the risk of playing volatile stocks that promise to jump the highest in the "sucker rally" he foresees. By March he advises a portfolio 37 percent in cash and the remainder "in a very defensive posture," comprising utilities such as telephone issues.

J. Anthony Boeckh, editor of the Bank Credit Analyst, which is published in Montreal, also takes a cautious attitude toward Wall Street. He believes that "technical factors suggest vulnerability in Fundamental factors, however, are beginning to improve, he said, adding that "a more positive attitude could be justified in (Continued on Page 13, Col. 7)

Test Seen Nearing For OPEC

Study Predicts Financial Ills

Reuters

NEW YORK - OPEC's campaign to maintain its price structure is approaching a major test in the financial markets, according to analysts at Salomon Brothers Inc.

"The weak links in the chain are already close to breaking," says a research report on the bond marker. The study, released Wednesday, was prepared by Graham Bishop, who is based in London, and Paul Mlotok, who is headquartered in New York.

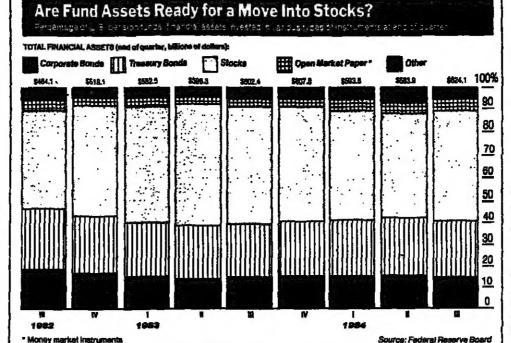

They said the test will be a financial one "because OPEC's needs are measured in dollars of export revenue, rather than barrels per day required to balance the physical oil

Separately, APS, the official Algerian news agency, said Wednes-day that 13 ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries are to hold an extraordinary meeting in Geneva on Jan. 28. The agency said ministers are to discuss controls on oil output and prices and price differentials on various kinds of petroleum.

The Salomon analysts said the richer OPEC countries - Kuwait, Libya, Oman, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates - have absorbed all the reduction in export revenues since 1982 but the poorer nations have accounted for the bulk of the delicits.

Because these poorer nations are unlikely to be able to finance their projected deficits, their options are limited to cutting imports, cheating on oil prices and quotas, ceasing to service their debt or receiving large financial grants from rich OPEC countries, the Salomon analysts

They said there will be a progressively greater risk of a decline in oil prices as financial pressures on the weaker OPEC members intensify. for two years or more," while "the need to cut imports, or borrow more, will be immediate" for these poorer nations, the authors said.

Bonds Slipping From Favor in U.S.

By Fred R. Bleakley

NEW YORK - Investors in the U.S. stock market have plenty of worries, ranging from the size of the federal deficit to the longevity of the American economic advance. But more money managers these days are creeping back into stocks for one simple reason: Bonds have become less competitive.

"The easy money has been made in the bond market," said Martin D. Sass, president of M.D. Sass Investors Services Inc. He was referring to the big decline in interest rates in the last seven months of 1984, which resulted in a run-up in bond prices.

Indeed, bonds clearly were the place to be during that period. While the average stock in the Standard & Poor's 500 returned 14.3 percent, with dividends included, long-term Treasury bonds scored nearly twice as well, racking up a return, including interest income and price change, of 27.3 percent. For the entire year, bonds also held the edge, 13.2 percent to 6.2 percent. But, Mr. Sass said, "Now is not the time to bet the ranch on bonds." He is shifting $100 million into equities, as he whittles down his company's cash account and reduces the bond portion of its $1.5billion portfolio to 40 percent, from 50 percent. Until a few weeks ago, Charles H. Brunie, chairman of the Oppenheimer Capital Corp., also believed that bonds were more attractive. But now he expects that stocks will perform about as well as fixed-income securities this year. His company, which has about $5.5 billion in pension assets under management, is buying $100 million in bonds and putting an extra $250 million to work in But "a major price cut is unlikely to in bonds and putting an extra $250 million to work in stimulate additional consumption the stock market, especially in consumer-oriented issues, such as Best Products Co. "Bonds have had a nice move," he said. "It's time > for stocks to get going." Few people, however, expect stocks to take off soon.

In fact, indecision appeared to grip both the stock and the bond markets last week as prices bounced erratically. And many investment professionals are not saying the decline in interest rates is finished

But compared to stocks, "the outperformance of bonds is over," said John A. Mendelson, group head of market analysis for Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "There's something left in boads, but there's more potential in stocks," he stated.

Many professional investors, including H. Kent Atkins, chief investment officer of Bankers Trust Co. are now taking their cue from projections of expected performance from the three key investment choices stocks, bonds and short-term cash investments.

Mr. Atkins, for instance, who oversees the investment of about $12 billion in assets of pension funds and other institutions, said his bank expects stocks to return 16.5 percent this year, bonds 13 percent and short-term cash securities 9 percent.

Usually, say the experts, the odds favor stocks when they are expected to produce an annual gain of better than 2.5 percentage points more than high-quality honds. If the expected gains for both stocks and bonds were about even, the odds would favor bonds because they are considered less risky.

For those investors with discretion over where they put their money, the asset-allocation models they use to guide them in choosing the proper mixture of stock, bond and cash investments strongly favored bonds over stocks around mid-1984.

Suresh Bhirud, chief portfolio strategist for First Boston Corp., noted that at the end of last May, bonds were weighted heavily in the mixture because the thencurrent yield of long-term Treasury bonds alone was 13.9 percent annually, while his expected total return

U.S. Jobless Rate Edged Higher In December

civilian work force in December as a surge in Americans looking for work surpassed the creation of about 340,000 new jobs during the month, the government reported

Wednesday.
The number of Americans actually holding jobs in December rose to a record 106.3 million, but the total of unemployed increased to 8.2 million as the labor force expanded by 390,000, the Labor Department report said.

The department also revised the jobless figures for the two preceding months, which had originally shown the unemployment rate declining to 7.2 percent in November from October's 7.4 percent. Wednesday's report revised those figures to 7.3 percent for October and 7.1 percent for November. Meanwhile, the number of "discouraged workers," those without jobs but not counted as unemployed because they have given up looking, increased to 1.3 million from the September level of 1.2 million, the department said.

A year-end slowdown in U.S. economic growth had led many economists to expect that the jobless rate would either rise a bit or remain flat in December. But widespread predictions of at least somewhat faster growth early in this new year suggested that the unemployment increase will be short-lived.

The unemployment rate, which reached 10.7 percent near the end of the 1981-82 recession, dropped to a revised 7.2 percent last June but bounced back to 7.5 percent before beginning to decline again.

An alternate overall unemployment rate, which combines the 114.5 million-member civilian labor force with the roughly 1.7 million members of the armed forces stationed in the United States, rose to 7.1 percent from 7 percent.

The biggest gains in employment were a hike of 95,000 in businesses providing services and an increase of 85,000 among manufacturers.

Among specific groups, the Labor Department reported that the unemployment rate for adult males the recession."

6.2 percent in November, while the ment edged up to 7.2 percent of the rate for adult women slipped to 6.4 percent from 6.5 percent.

> For whites of both sexes, the department said, the rate rose to 6.2 percent from 6.1 percent; for blacks, it fell to 15 percent from 15.1 percent, and for hispanics, the rate rose to 10.2 percent from 10.1

Among black teenagers, the group with the highest unemployment, the jobless rate was 42.1 per-cent, up from 41.2 percent in No-

Before Wednesday's announce ment, analysts said that slowerthan-anticipated retail sales conceivably could contribute to pushing up the unemployment rate a tenth of a percentage point or so.

The nation's largest retailers all reported increases in December Christmas sales from a year ago, but the levels were disappointing because they were less than many retailers had hoped, financial analysts said.

New claims for unemployment compensation benefits, one indicator of the health of the U.S. labor market, rose by 5,000 to 405,000 in the week ended Dec. 22, the Labor Department reported last week.

Janet L. Norwood, the commissioner of labor statistics, said in testimony prepared for a Wednes-day hearing of the congressional Joint Economic Committee that, after seasonal adjustment, the retail segment of the job market posted no gains last month. She noted however, hefty increases in retail employment in October and No-

She added that five industries had December employment levels actually lower than at the official end of the recession in November 1982 — mining, steel, tobacco, pe-troleum and coal, and leather.

She also said two-thirds of the increase in job creation in the last two years was in services, and that the goods-producing sector, very few industries had added more than the number of jobs lost during

Pirated Kecordings Big Business in Portugal

By Ken Portinger International Herald Tribune

LISBON — Rogério P., a Lisbon gypsy, has profitably hawked pirat-ed music cassettes on the Praça de Espanha for the past four years and says that his trade, out of a suitcase, makes him a good living.

His wares, priced today at 180 escudos (about $1.05) each, cost only a third of the genuine article. His pitch is lucratively repeated by hundreds of other hawkers on street corners and at fairs around the country.

The peddlers are supplied by a backstreet growth industry that is moving its products into the U.S. and European markets, causing big headaches for international recording companies.

The cassette pirates, thought to produce more than 7 million illegal articles a year, have become priority targets for the legitimate indus-try, which in a recent report cast Portugal as the major European center for pirated recordings.

Patrick W. Hurley, European vice president for operations for CBS Records, a subsidiary of New York-based CBS Inc. and a giant in the record and tape business, said

Pound Recovers Early Losses; Dollar Higher The Associated Press

LONDON - The British pound sank against the dollar Wednesday before rebounding late in the session, while the dollar gained against several other key currencies.

In London, sterling fell to $1.138 in the morning before recovering to $1.142 at the close. The pound closed at $1.1485 Tuesday. The pound's decline followed reports that Britain was selling its North Sea oil on the spot market at less than the official price, Paul Neild, chief economist for British stockbrokers Phillips & Drew, said the pound also was weak because British interest rates were being held

In Tokyo, where trading ends before it begins in Europe, the dollar rose to 255 yen from 253.725 Tuesday. Other late dollar rates in Europe, compared with Tuesday closes, included: 3.1672 Deutsche marks, up from 3.1385; 2.6455 Swiss francs, up from 2.639, and 9.6975 French francs, up from 9.62.

that his company was among the hardest hit.

"For the past decade, Portugal has figured as the top producer of pirated cassettes and as a major illegal exporter of pop records, at a financial loss to the European industry last year alone of as much as $20 million," he said in a recent interview in Lisbon.

Mr. Horley said that the illegality lies in contraventions of contract restrictions between the licensee and the licensor that limit production and sales of a particular recording to the Portuguese mar-

Local recording industry chiefs have been battling the pirates and peddlers for several years. Howev-er, they complain that legal sanctions against the pirates and peddlers are derisory.

Carlos Pinto, head of the Portuguese branch of the London-based International Federation of the Phonographic Industry, said that fines for peddlers were laughable because suppliers guaranteed them free replacement of any cassettes confiscated in police raids.

Luis Francisco Rebelo, president of the Portuguese Society of Authors - the national copyright organization - said that recording artists in Portugal were losing millions of escudos a year through the activities of pirates. An artist receives approximately 8 percent of the sale price of each record or cassette. If we consider that 80 percent of the Portuguese cassette market is pirated, we get an idea of how much money is at stake," he said,

The society has triggered a number of successful police raids against illegal cassette sellers, and it said that a new, stronger law protecting the property of artists and intellectuals is due to be passed by the Portuguese parliament early this year.

However, industry sources believe that until heavy prison sentences are imposed on the pirate chiefs, whose activities are said to be well documented by private investigators, the business will continue to flourish

The maximum sentence upon conviction for music piracy is now a year in jail.

The Portuguese branch of the phonographic trade group recently stepped up pressure on the government to put an end to pirate activities. And a senior Portuguese treasury official assured Mr. Hurley of CBS that the government was doing its best to implement anti-piracy laws.

"So they should," said Mr. Hurley, who estimated that the Portuguese tax authorities lost the equivalent of $1.6 million last year in (Continued on Page 13, Col. 5)

United Press Interna NEW YORK - The stock market pushed higher in its best advance of the new year Wednesday as investors took encouragement from signs that interest rates might be easing

The Dow Jones industrial average was up 9.38 to 1,201.98 about an hour before closing. Advancing stocks led declines by a 2-1 ratio among the 1,961 issues crossing the New York Stock Exchange tape. The five-hour Big Board volume amounted to nillion in the like period Tuesday.

Department reported the unemployment rate was 7.2 percent in December, compared with a revised 7.1 percent in November. The federal funds rate on overnight loans of reserves between banks was 8 percent at midday, unchanged from late Tuesday. Southwest Bank, a small St. Louis institution, innounced a cut in its prime lending rate to 10% percent from 10% percent effective Thursday. The 10%-percent level has been the prevailing broker loan rate to 9 percent from 94 percent. Jerry Hinkle, of Sanford C. Bernstein Co., said the stock market seems to hive strong sup-port at the 1,180 level on the Dow index. The first three trading days of 1985 saw the market drop to that area but it has been able to recover

Mr. Hinkle said institutional activity was relatively light, with some interest in the stocks of savings and loans, automakers and utilities. Gary Ciminero, chief economist at Fleet National Bank, Providence, Rhode Island, said the stock market is facing an environment of re-duced earnings growth but lower interest rates.

He said the earnings prospects have been overly discounted by the market, while lower interest rates could lead to expanding priceearnings multiples which would trigger a "pret-ty good move in the stock market."

Although economic growth in 1985 will be only half as fast as in 1984, "I don't see a sion," Mr. Ciminero said.

He said the Federal Reserve has rapidly backtracked from a tight money policy which slowed the economy in the third quarter. The new Fed posture combined with the stimulative effect of the budget deficit "should keep the economy cruising along of its own accord."

On the trading floor, American Medical International was near the top of the active list and up a fraction. A block of 750.000 shares crossed at 19 and a block of 500,000 shares

AT&T was up a fraction at midday on heavy

P&O, Sterling Plan A £1-Billion Merger

Drew.

By Bob Hagerty International Herald Tribune

LONDON - Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. is pre-paring to merge with Sterling Guarantee Trust PLC in an exchange of shares valued at nearly £1 billion (about $1.14 billion).

The shipping and construction concern said Wednesday that it was discussing terms with Sterling a real estate and industrial services company that already owns 20 percent of P&O.

The terms for the long-expected combination were expected to be announced Monday.

Sir Jeffrey Sterling is chairman of both P&O and Sterling, and the combination would spare him and his top aide, Bruce MacPhail, from having to divide their time between

Union Carbide Assails Lowering Of Its Debt Rating

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Union Carbide Corp. has complained that the low-ering of its debt rating by Standard & Poor's Corp. was excessive and

S&P said Tuesday that Union Carbide debt was being revised to the lowest investment grade because of the gas leak Dec. 3 at the company's plant in Bhopal, India. Union Carbide's senior long-term debt was lowered to BBB plus from A, its subordinated long-term debt to BBB from A minus, and its commercial paper to A-2 from A-1.

"We don't believe the action was warranted by the facts or legal analysis of the Indian situation," said J. Clayton Stephenson, executive vice president and chief financial officer of Union Carbide. S&P said the change was necessary not so much because of the company's potential liability for the gas leak, which killed more than 2.000 people, but because of the accident's potential "negative spillover" onto suppliers and customers; because management attention would be diverted into defending against lawsuits, and because of the company's "constrained access to capital markets." Mr. Stephenson denied all of those assertions. He said that only a few Union Carbide managers were handling the Bhopal situa-tion, and that the company had only minimal refinancing needs.

As of the end of the third quarter of 1983, Union Carbide had $2.28

TOKYO — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone has ordered his cabinet to draft new measures to further open the Japanese market to foreign products, officials said

Mr. Nakasone told his cabinet Tuesday that priority should go to sales from abroad of telecommunications equipment, electronics, forestry products, pharmaceuticals and medical equipment.

He ordered the ministers to report back to him by the end of March, officials said.

The prime minister had promised President Ronald Reagan in talks last week in Los Angeles that he would foster imports as a means of reducing the ballooming U.S. trade deficit with Japan.

What makes Morgan the most innovative bank in both the Eurobond and syndicated loan markets

When the leading participants in the world's capital markets were asked by Euromoney magazine which bank is the most innovative in the international bond and syndicated loan markets—"the best house for introducing successful new techniques"—Morgan ranked first in both areas.

"Morgan is a corporate finance-driven merchant bank, (which) may explain some of its inventiveness," Euromoney wrote in its commentary on the poll results. "It tends to see the securities business from a company's point of view; its corporate finance officers estimate how the bank's forex, swap and Eurobond capabilities can minimize costs and meet the particular needs of the client company."

Morgan has earned this recognition by putting our uniquely comprehensive set of capabilities to work for the long-term interests of our clients.

As a major participant in the capital, credit, and local currency markets, as well as in worldwide foreign exchange, government bond, and bullion markets, we have exceptional opportunities for exploiting intermarket arbitrage for the benefit of our clients in innovative ways.

Morgan is the leading counterparty that can act with equal proficiency as either principal or agent in rate and currency swap transactions. Our especially strong capital position, reflected in our AAA/Aaa credit ratings, client costs and risks in each swap we arrange.

enhances our role as principal and can reduce ☐ Because Morgan concentrates on the international capital markets, we can devote all our worldwide resources to providing superior service in these markets to our clients.

A recent example of Morgan innovation:
For a $500 million Kingdom of Sweden floating-rate note issue, our Eurobond underwriting subsidiary, Morgan Guaranty Ltd, proposed the first U.S. Treasury-style auction in the international capital markets, then committed to place a competitive bid for the entire issue. The package gave Sweden the lowest cost related to the London Inter-Bank Deposit Bid Rate ever achieved in the Eurodollar floating-rate note market. And its success led to a second Swedish auction issue, for $700 million.

Other recent examples: profitable Deutschemark defeasance transactions for three major U.S. issuers, and zero-coupon Eurobond issues which we swapped into floating-rate funding for Electricité de France, Nordic Investment Bank, and Swedish Export Credit.

Measure our performance. Let us compete for your mandate. You'll find we deliver imaginative, cost-effective services in the capital markets with the same high quality and skill that have long been hallmarks of all Morgan banking business.

Profit Sharing To Be Cut at GM

New York Times Service

DETROIT - General Motors Corp. production workers, who were told during unioncontract negotiations last summer that they could expect to receive about $1,000 in profit sharing for 1984, will get only about half that amount, the company says.

Company officials said Tuesday that profit sharing is likely to amount to about $550 per worker this year, or $90 less than the average $640 paid in 1983, even though 1984 profits are expected to approach $5 billion against the $3.7 billion earned in 1983.

GM officials said the reasons for the decline, despite the larger profits, are the effects of strikes last fall at plants in the United States and against GM in Canada and the larger number of the control of the larger number of ber of workers dividing up the profit-sharing pool. GM has called back about 100,000 factory workers since the end of 1983.

His works often went unpublished and were sometimes censored. At best, they caused scandal and high moral outrage - even while the artist was becoming ever more of a celebrity. AUGUST STRINDBERG

By Olof Lagercrantz, Translated by Anselm Hollo, 399 pp. $25.50.

Farrar Straus Giroux, 19 Union Square West, New York, N. Y. 10003.

Reviewed by Eva Hoffman

O NE can hardly imagine a more fascinating, or a more formidable biographical subject than August Strindberg. Aside from writing some of the most powerful dramas to visit the stage at any time, he dramatized his own life with an uninhibited flair that some times verged on the bathetic, and sometimes came close to a form of insanity.

The extreme volatility of his temperament was accompanied by an egotism that led him from manic peaks of self-esteem to abysses of humiliation and despair. His relations with women and his attitudes toward them are, of course, rich material for a psychoanalytic case-study — a study that Strindberg himself was constantly pursuing and reformulating in a prodigious body of work.

Lagercrantz, a Swedish poet and literary critic and the first scholar to undertake a major biography of Strindberg in decades, touches on all these multiple strands in his subject's life and character. Unfortunately, he doesn't delve into them with either the analytic or the imaginative forcefulness required to convey and comprehend Strindberg's intense struggles and contradictions. The result is an informative, but oddly flat study of this most highly etched of personalities

Indeed, Lagercrantz's prevailing attitude is one of cautious and almost hostile skepticism. Strindberg, Lagercrantz contends, was basically a poseur, always creating scenarios and personae that fueled his art, but that had only a tenuous correspondence to the realities of his life. Autobiographical works like "The Serving Maid's Son" are treated as a fabric of self-deceptions and sentimental exaggerations. While that work's first chapter is titled "Afraid and Hungry." Lagercrantz notes, in fact. Strindberg grew up in a relatively well-to-do household. Even his father's bankruptcy didn't cause the family much hardship. And while Strindberg continually emphasized his youthful loneliness, there is plenty of evidence that he was sociable and surrounded by good ward to the later perceptions of psychoanaly-sis, and to such writers as D. H. Lawrence or James Joyce. It would have been illuminating if Strindberg, Lagercrantz tells us, got into the habit of presenting himself as the victimized, persecuted genius — a habit that may account for the virulence of his attacks on his putative Lagercrantz had placed Strindberg in a wider intellectual context — if he had told us some-thing about the dramatic soil from which his naturalistic plays emerged, or analyzed his impact on such later artists as Eugene O'Neill and Ignmar Bergman. As it stands, the biography is probably most useful in pointing us to the great variety of Strindberg's work — in reminding us that he was a forward-looking painter, an ethnographer, journalist, historian, amateur scientist, and author of many hardly remembered novels and plays. There remains a Strindberg still to be discovered.

Strindberg's recurring spiritual crises and dark nights of the soul. For example, referring to Strindberg's letter that suggests suicidal impulses, he writes that it is "a literary product," and that "his alleged state of extreme agitation is described with remarkable linguistic con-

Strindberg's madness, that does not preclude the possibility that the state was genuine. Early on, Strindberg referred to himself as

But by then Zoeller and other familiar tour stars may find they have some new rivals for fans' attention. For in 1985 they may be facing one of the strongest foreign invasions in the history of the PGA tour, an invasion led by Greg Norman and Seve Ballesteros, two well known foreign stars, and joined by Denis Watson, Tommy Nakajima and Bernhard Langer.

Zoeller won the Open last June during five painful rounds at Winged Foot, beating Australia's Norman in the 18-hole playoff. During the tournament he had to overcome constant pain in his back, and he wore a specially built electric belt at night to give himself

But the condition deteriorated, and Zoeller could not tee it up for the PGA Championship at Shoal Creek, Alabama, in August. The back pain was so intense that he was hospitalized in Birmingham. Alabama, the night before the tournament began. On Sept. 25, he underwent surgery to repair two rup-

Most golf lans will be rooting for Zoeller to return to full strength quickly. They also want to see Trevino, Ballesteros and Crenshaw continue to win.

Ballesteros, of course, will be leading the group of foreign players trying to make their mark. The Spaniard has been playing in the United States for several years, and Gary Player of South Africa has been around much longer. But there are four other foreign golfers who have given every indication that they will be able to earn a big share of the record $22 million-plus in purses to be offered in 1985.

Norman, who was the hottest golfer on the 1984 tour during a midsummer stretch of about six weeks, won $310,000, ninth on the 1984 money list. He and Ballesteros are entering their second year as card-carrying PGA tour golfers. ■ Travel Complaints Rejected Serge Lang, the "father" of the World Cup since the circuit began in 1966, rejected charges Wednes-day that the international racing calendar involves too much travel, United Press International reported from Kitzbühel, Austria. Lang denied a recent jaunt from West Germany to southern France and then to Austria for four races in less than a week was too tough for the men to handle. The only ones complaining are the coaches," he said. "The coaches pretend to be pros - let them be treated as pros. They are just acting like spoiled little children."

Until the recent cold spell, warm weather since late November had disrupted the tightly-packed cup schedule, forcing dozens of postponements and venue changes.

"I'm not on the floor anymore, and Wistful County is the pits. I'm not just saying that because I lost the election after serving the people there for 20 years. It was the pits when I first came to Congress, and it's the pits now."

"Did you ever practice law be-fore you got elected to public of-fice?"

"No, and I don't intend to practice it now. I'm going to be the rainmaker at Tort & Tort." 'What's a rainmaker?

"The fellow that makes it rain new business on the firm because of the people he knows. I may be out of office but I still have friends who owe me a few favors."

"Then you're going to be an influence peddler."

"Never. My job is to provide advice and consent to the private sector which can't operate under the oppressive laws passed by a vindictive anti-business Congress," he said. "Clients will come to me, not because of the influence I still wield, but because of my expertise in getting around the overbearing rules and regulations I demanded when I served the people."

"You can't be a rainmaker in Washington if you are not willing to stand up for the things your clients believe in. The reason excongressmen and ex-senators are in demand by Washington law firms is that we have access to our former colleagues on the floor, not to mention the use of the congressional dining rooms and the gym. It's amazing how much law you can practice when you're doing Jane Fonda exercises with the chairman of a House or a Senate committee."

"And they don't treat you any differently because you are no longer a member of Congress?"

"They treat you better, because now that you're with a big law furm you are a potential source of funds for their future political campaigns.

What about the administration? How do they look on you?" "Kindly. If you were a former Republican congressman, they want to make it up to you for losing your election. And if you were a former Democratic congressman, they are so delighted that you are no longer in opposition that they'll go overboard to show they don't hold grudges."

"You can't say Washington doesn't take care of its own."

"Had I known then what I know now I would have lost an election 10 years ago," he said.

The phone rang and Turtleback picked it up. "Willy, how are you? How are things at Wistful Tools? You don't say? The Navy re-

'Personal Trainers' Shape Up Clients in Latest Fitness Fad

NEW YORK — To some people they are "the new therapists." To others they are one of the status symbols of the 1980s. To most people who employ them they are the prime molivators for whipping a flabby body into shane. They are personal trainers.

muscled men and women who stand over their clients in gyms or private homes and exhort them to do "just five more" repetitions on the exercise machines. The clients, moaning and sweating, strain to do those final reps. After all, they don't want to disappoint their trainers.

"Trainers are the new thera-pists," said Susan L. Schulman, 39. a CBS Entertainment executive, "It has to do with the whole psychological thing of bringing you to a vulnerable state. You let go of all the veneer. During my workouts. I tell them all sorts of personal things, about my love

Schulman does her one-hour workouts twice a week with Patti and Gibby Cohen at the gleaning new Polygym. The 24-hour gym, on the second floor of a brownstone, is open only to trainers and their clients and will book no more than eight trainer-client teams at a time. The trainers pay Speaking of the close relation-ships that often develop between $20 an hour for the gym, and the clients in turn pay the trainers anywhere from $50 to $100 an

The Cohens - she is 38 and he is 41 — are among that small group of trainers who charge $100 an hour for their services. Another trainer at Polygym, Theresa Lamb, 33, also charges that amount. The gym is offering a $15,000 gift certificate, good for "one new body." It entitles the bearer to one year of three onehour workouts a week with a $100-an-hour trainer.

The Cohens, like many trainers, got their start at the Sports Training Institute in New York. Their clients include the actor Burgess Meredith, the actress Carlin Glynn and Stephen D. Hassenfeld, chairman of the Hasbro Bradley toy company. Cohen estimates there are 500 to 1,000 trainers in the city who work with clients one-to-one, either in gyms or in private homes.

None of the trainers is licensed or certified, because there is no accrediting procedure. Nor do they have any national organization. As a result, anyone can call timself or herself a trainer.

"Yes, anyone can be a trainer." said Neal Reed, 36, who has been one for eight years. "But the proof is in the pudding. The only credential you have to have is that people keep coming back." Reed was an All-American basketball player at Pratt Insti-tute, where he studied architecture. He was racing bicycles when he got his first job as a trainer at the Sports Training Institute. He is now a salaried trainer at twogyms, the Fifth Avenue Racquet Club and the Uptown Racquet Club and Fitness Center. His cli-ents have included Arthur Ashe, Reed said he trains 10 to 15 clients a day. Most of the men, he said, want to work on their abdomens, while the women are worried that something is happening to their thighs. "And there usual ly is something happening to their highs," he said.

trainer and client. Reed said: "You get people in the machines who break down and cry. I had a woman one time whose father was treating her mother poorly. You have to read them and know you can't push them hard when they're having a bad day." An occupational hazard, several trainers agreed, is a client's becoming infatuated with a trainer, or vice versa, Reed said that before he got married, almost all the women he dated were clients. "The basic way to meet girls was to train them," he said.

Tommy Colbert, on the other hand, said he tried to keep his relationship with his female clients "very professional." He said the one time he got involved with a client "turned out disastrously - I lost the client, and I'll never make that mistake again."

Colbert, 27, has been described by one of his clients, the writer Gay Talese. as "the matince idol of the Vertical Club." He trains people at that club, at Broadway Body Builders and in private homes. His monthly fee ranges from $240 to $500. Last winter he spent a month and a half in Tucson, Arizona, keeping Treat Williams and Kris Kristofferson in shape while the actors were making the film "Flashpoint."

Asked why he thought trainers had become so important to some people, Colbert said: "Some think it's prestigious and sort of a status symbol. I know I have three or four female clients who just want to be seen with a handsome trainer. Manhattan is, after all, the glitter dome, But for the serious person, the motivation a trainer gives is unmatchable. We push and guide people beyond their limits. If you're there alone,

Some people said they were drawn to trainers because many of them work in small, lesscrowded gyms where exercising. rather than socializing, is empha-sized. "I come to Polygym because there aren't a lot of people in striped leotards lined up on fancy blue carpets waiting to use the machines." said Carlin Glynn, who is 44. "I have three kids, and I work all the time, and I just feel that an hour with a trainer is the most effective use of my time."

Some clients say there can be a sadistic element to the training, when a trainer tries to push a client too far. Most try to bring the client's muscles to a point known as muscle failure, on the theory that it is the best way to strengthen the muscles.

Some trainers are sadistic." said Sallie Slate, director of public relations at Barnard College in New York City. She recalled being at a gym where a trainer would regularly say such things as 'Come on, get mean, don't wimp out on me now."

"You can get into a weird kind of relationship when you're being told to do more, better, harder, she said. Her trainer, Jay Schafran, at the Sports Training Institute, was "like a shrink," she add ed. "He has a laid-back, 'shrinky' voice and is very relaxing."

Neal Reed said he didn't think he was sadistic but conceded that a trainer had to know how to "manipulate" people in order to motivate them. "One girl I beat on - I take a towel and swing it at her," he said. "Others I embarrass. I'll say, 'Even my daughter can do one more rep.' But it's all joking. You never want anyone to feel defeated, because they get enough of that at home."

Disc for Famine Relief Still Leads U.K. Charts

Britain's biggest-ever selling single, Band Aid's "Do They Know It's Christmas?" stayed atop the piet switch country's pop chart for the fifth week. All proceeds from the disc. performed by some of the biggest names in British pop music and the brainchild of Boomtown Rats lead-er Bob Geldof, are going to Ethiopia's samine victims. . : . Meanwhile in Addis Ababa, Geldof said his shopping list for Ethiopia's famine victims will include food, medicine, trucks, water well drilling rigs and tents. "I'll be back myself to see that it goes where it is supposed to go — the mouths of starving people," said the British pop singer. The record has raised $7 million so far.

Yul Bryuner has played the lead in "The King and I" more than 4,400 times since 1951, but be hasn't worn out his welcome on Broadway. The 64-year-old actor's farewell run as the king of Siam has become the New York theater season's first box office smash. When the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical opened at the Broadway Theater on Monday, the box office took in $266,556 and the line of ticket-buyers stretched around the

An attorney for John Heckler asserted that Heckler's wife of 30 years, Margaret Heckler, 53, U.S. health and human services secretary, condemned his client to "a-life of either celibacy or adultery," as Mrs. Heckler's divorce suit opened in Dedham, Massachusetts, Tuesday. The lawyer conceded that Heckler committed adultery but said it was not until four years after Mrs. Heckler refused to have sexual relations with him. Mrs. Heckler, first elected to Congress in 1966, "condoned" her husband's infidelity to keep the marriage together. the attorney added. "She wanted at all costs to avoid a divorce which would harm her political career. Her political ambitions were all-consuming." "Margaret Heckler's main concern is to protect the dignity of the marriage, the children and the family," one of Mrs. Heckler's lawyers said later. "The whole issue here is essentially a financial one," Mrs. Heckler said before the trial opened. Her husband operates an investment business. The
